to the curb in terms of quality, but, hey, if you want to. A good looking video that is most likely in HD and is also portable seems like a no-brainer to me. Personally, I'm a fan of watching movies and TV on my laptop (or iPad or iPhone or whatever). So much so that I seldom watch them on my TV set. It just doesn't make any sense to me that I'd buy a TV for that (or any other purpose for that matter). Not that I have a problem with the "imagine the beauty" and all that stuff, but I know enough about it to know it's not real, unless you're talking about books, art and the like. I haven't seen any HD yet. I think when I do, I'm going to change my mind. There is something magical about having content you have never seen, on a big screen. I think a lot of it has to do with just how the brain works. I got a high def TV about a year ago... never watched a movie on it, just used it as a screen for my computer. It was better, but was a waste of space and money. If I had known how much the HD TV's would cost, I would have bought a normal TV and used the money for something else. If I were able to get one cheap, I would go with it, but at the current price, I would buy a new HD TV instead. It will always be better for watching movies than the computer screen, but, since the computer is the one I use the most, it would be a waste of money. I have seen some HD that is excellent quality. All of the HD I have seen is way better than a DVD or DVD player. Doubt that. If I had that kind of money, I'd probably buy a new TV and a great sound system. The current one is great, but it is not very big and doesn't have good speakers. It does have a pretty good integrated DVD player. Oh, I see what you mean. It is a waste of money to have a TV and then buy 82157476af
